COMMENTARY: First of all, miscellaneous information: (1) We are still having problems posting "sold" on the web-site for the current list in a timely fashion. We should have that resolved by the time this list is mailed. (2) We are now collecting email addresses so that we can notify customers approximately when the next list will be on the website. We will also soon be emailing you when new items have been added to our still somewhat primitive website. (3) We continue to receive more email than we can easily deal with, so please accept our apologies if we delay or fail to respond to non-essential messages. (4) When ordering coins from a list, please mention the list number, so that we and our computer can find the coins. And remember that in many cases, a single telephone call is more effective than a rash of emails.

More on China: In list 205 I left off at Urumqi. Roger and I flew to Kashgar, the ancient and medieval capitol of Xinjiang, known in the Middle East as Eastern Turkestan. The 1970s 4 to 6 story hotel was awaiting us there, half-heartedly operated by the Communist government, tolerable but not exciting, perhaps the Chinese equivalent of Motel 6. The city was fascinating. Fortunately, the current provincial government is preserving several of the pre-modern neighborhoods, albeit (fortunately!) with modern electricity, water and sewage. The winding streets in "old town" are too narrow for automobiles, wind around in unpredictable directions, with children playing in the streets (good for them!), donkeys carrying goods and building materials, pedestrians, bicycles and occasional motorcycles. This reminded me of umpteen old villages in Iran, Turkey, Palestine and Syria. Only Yemen, with its 4 to 8 story homes, was markedly different.

Kashgar is surrounded by a vast agricultural area, fed by water flowing from the nearby Pamir Mountains, which separate Xinjiang from Afghanistan, Tajikistan and Kyrgyzstan, and filled with small villages, each with its mosque(s), its grocery stores. They are usually built along the highways, most of which are unpaved but reasonably well maintained. There were no buses, virtually no automobiles, very few trucks, but lots of horses, donkeys, bikes and a few motorcycles. We passed through many of these villages while visiting nearby ancient sites.

On my 3rd day in Kashgar, we were driven along the Karakorum Highway (much of it under major reconstruction) to the Karakuli Lake, about 12,000 feet high, between the tall Pamir mountains of Kungan and Muztagata, rising to 7791 meters (25,560 feet), towering over the lake and its valley. We were just a few miles from the Tajikistan border. We stopped for lunch at a small resort, with a few hotel-like rooms, a simple restaurant, and the toilets outside. There were steady winds coming down from the surrounding mountains, with the temperature just above freezing but feeling colder. We returned to Kashgar late afternoon and flew back to Urumqi that evening, on a new Boeing 757 with all its seats occupied. More to follow...
