Extremely Rare Huvishka Gold Dinar with Three Nimbate Figures on Reverse, The First Example of This Rare Type Offered In A Public Auction

838. KUSHAN: Huvishka, ca. 155-187 AD, AV dinar (7.96g), G-157.1, BMC-XXVIII/24, NC-XX/17 (same reverse die), diademed and crowned half-length bust left, with flames above right shoulder, holding mace and ankusa (elephant goad), clouds below, PAOhAHOPAO O-OhPKI KOPANO // three nimbate figures standing facing on double dais within ornate aedicule, the central figure crowned, the others with their heads turned toward him, tamgha in inner left field, MA-AC-H-NO BIZA O CKAN O K-OMAPO, Choice AU, RRR $50,000 - 55,000

This is the first example of this type to be offered for sale in a public auction. Only a few other specimens are known to exist, including two in the British Museum (#1867,1218.11, plate example in BMC (1886), NC (1892), Göbl (1984) as G-157.1; #1865,0803.16, possibly a later imitation due to its rather crude style), and one in the Münzkabinett at the Berlin State Museums (#18206906, plate example in Göbl (1984) as G-157.2, with a very similar obverse to our example).

Judging by their depiction on the coinage of Huvishka (G-156, 157, 298), Mahasena (Maaseno), Skanda-Kumara (Skando-Bizago), Vishakha (Bizago) were separate war deities in the Kushan pantheon before fusing into a single deity by the Gupta period. Today, they are among the many names for Kartikeya, the Hindu god of war.

Lot 838

847. GUPTA: Chandragupta III, 468-470, AV dinar (8.20g), cf. Dinars of Chandragupta should have one of three symbols between the king's head and the Garuda, either crescent, chakra, or srivatsa, but it is off flan on this piece, thus the association to Chandragupta III is somewhat tentative. The weight corresponds to the heaviest dinars of Chandragupta II (ca. 383-412) and the lightest ones of Chandragupta III.

This type, bearing the Sikh symbol, was likely struck by supporters of the Sikhs inside the city of Lahore, for unknown arrangements. By this year (=1710/11), the Sikhs had conquered most of eastern Punjab but not the city of Lahore, which would remain under Mughal authority until 1765. However, it seems reasonable that the Mughal officials at the Lahore mint may have authorized to insert the khanda symbol for unrecorded political reasons (published in ONS Newsletter #144).
